

Bloodborne Pathogen Exposure Control Plan

City of Rivergate — Health & Human Services — Published 2025-01-27

Purpose

This document describes staff exposure control procedures for bloodborne pathogens for residents and staff of the City of Rivergate. It is maintained by the Health & Human Services department and is reviewed on an annual basis or whenever the underlying policy, ordinance, or state guidance changes.

Questions about the content of this document should be directed to the Health & Human Services front desk during regular business hours, or submitted through the city's online service portal.

Scope and Applicability

The provisions described here apply within the incorporated limits of the City of Rivergate unless otherwise noted. Where state or federal requirements are stricter, the stricter requirement governs.

Nothing in this document should be read as legal advice. Residents with questions about how a requirement applies to their specific situation are encouraged to contact the department before beginning work or submitting an application.

How to Get Help

Copies of this document are available in alternate formats upon request, including large print and electronic text. To request an accommodation, contact the City Clerk's office at least five business days in advance.

The latest version of this and other Health & Human Services publications is posted on the city website. Printed copies available at City Hall may lag the online version; when in doubt, the online version controls.
